

How to send a postcard

We are quite sure you can manage. Here is a guide anyway, because it is a nice thing to have.

1

Their name can wait

Know who it's for? Pencil their name on the back. Not sure yet? Start colouring anyway. It will come to you.

2

Colour it, quickly or slowly

One sitting, or five. Nobody who gets one of these looks at the shading.

3

Four lines is plenty

Say who they are to you, not what they did for you. Less is sometimes more.

4

Their address, on the right

The right half of the back, under the stamp corner. Don't have their address? Ask them, or someone who knows them.

5

One stamp, top right

Option 1: send it on its own. One stamp, at your postcard or letter rate. No stamp? Ask someone older, who may know more about them. People like being asked.

6

Tuck a blank one in

Option 2: slip yours into an envelope with an uncoloured card, and stamp the envelope at the letter rate. Whoever opens it colours it, and sends it on.

7

Into the post box

Whenever it's ready, pop it in a post box or hand it in at the post office. On rural delivery, your letterbox with the flag up works too. Then it is out of your hands.

There is no wrong way to do this.

No rush. Some cards wait in the drawer for the right person.

What you need, and where to get it near you:
marlowren.com/write

Marlo Wren 🐦